

Grammar: Exercise Sheet 3 — Mood Tags

Add the correct question tag to each of the following sentences (note: in each case the question tag has rising intonation, so you should write a question mark at the end):

1. The manager's left the factory already,
2. I think there's some milk left,
3. He ought to have excused himself before he left the table,
4. He can't possibly have known we were planning to skip class,
5. Nobody had any problems with the grammar exam,
6. Surely the United States won't agree to the French proposal,
7. He never used to skip classes at school,
8. I don't suppose you could lend me your car,
9. Let's have a party this weekend,
10. I'll be guided by your wishes then,

Grammar: Exercise Sheet 3 — Mood Tags (continued)

Add the correct question tag to each of the following sentences (note: in each case the question tag has falling intonation, so you don't need to write a question mark at the end):

1. He hardly ever has sandwiches for lunch,
2. Please remember to put the garbage out before you go to bed,
3. The President will know mother has two bravery medals already,
4. Please don't forget to feed the cat before you leave the house,
5. She's got a brother in America if I remember rightly,
6. I wouldn't say he's exactly the worst teacher we've ever had, though,
7. I'll bet she hasn't got the new Taylor Swift CD,
8. But Boris Johnson would never have decided to quit voluntarily,
9. Occasionally one can be simply unlucky,
10. There's never been an earthquake in Saarbrücken,